Program Description

Lincoln Community High School's Intervention For Truancy, Project LIFT, serves chronic truants, truants and retrieved dropouts in a variety of ways. The truancy social worker provides services which include but are not limited to the following: recruitment of parents to work in partnership with the school; counseling services; referral of students to tutors; "After School" to make up credit deficiencies for freshmen, sophomores, juniors and seniors; flexible scheduling which allows for compacting the school day to meet individual student needs; experience related work programs; referral to appropriate community organizations and agencies.

"After School" classes are one component of the program. Classes in English, Math, Social Studies, and Science are offered on a regular basis and will be taught by members of the LCHS faculty. Computer courses will allow students to work at their own pace without the constraints of a traditional classroom setting. This format will encourage program participants to take responsibility for completion for the required material to earn course credit. "After School" allows students with credit deficiencies an opportunity to get back on track in their attempt to earn a high school diploma. Program participants utilize "After School" to complete course work in order to focus on a vocational or work program during the regular school day. The provision of a less structured, performance based academic program allows these disaffected learners to take pride and ownership in their educational pursuit while gaining valuable vocational and work experience. Eligible candidates will be identified and referred by guidance counselors, teachers, administrators and the truancy social worker.
